Information

Denver Water contracted with Infinity Tech Group in November of 2012 for software development services related to the Oracle Customer Information & Billing (CC&B) System. These highly specialized services have been provided by Ashok Prakasam, who possesses advanced expertise and experience with Denver Water's CC&B system, dating back to its implementation in 2009.

Needs for continuation of these contract services include:

- Providing technical design solutions and documentation for implementing new business functionality in CC&B
- Providing software programming and testing for CC&B enhancements
- Executing software code migrations between development, testing and production environments
- Providing CC&B Production support services, including:
 - Production process execution and performance monitoring
 - Investigation, resolution, follow-up and reporting of production problems

The most significant 2015 project requiring Ashok's skills is the programming of a new water rate structure for 2016. The IT CIS team is continuing to advance their CC&B software development skills to achieve a high degree of self-sufficiency. This contract with Infinity Tech Group will not be extended beyond this amendment.

Funding for this contract amendment is included in the approved 2015 budget and proposed 2016 budget for the IT CIS Program Component.

Recommendation:

It is recommended that the Board approve this contract extension with Infinity Tech Group, Inc. for software development services to be provided by Ashok Prakasam, through May of 2016, for an additional amount of $224,400, resulting in a total contract amount not to exceed $557,600.
